

Comment on Proceeding 17-108

To start, what the hell do y'all think you're doing? Like it or not, the internet is the main method of communication in the modern world. By opening the door for ISP's to adjust traffic, you are proposing to completely undermine everything that America is founded on: freedom of thought.

The argument that ISP's won't adjust traffic for corporate gain is simply false. There have been numerous examples over the years, especially as related to Comcast.

The argument that net neutrality de incentives infrastructure improvements is similarly nonsense. Not only have many companies told their investors otherwise, it just makes no sense. With net neutrality in place, consumers will base their choice of ISP solely on internet speed and price, thereby placing infrastructure as the highest priority for these companies.

In short, I fully support complete net neutrality and the labeling of ISP's under Title II.

Don't do this to us, to America.

Sincerely,
Sean Mullin
